

coat, give your cloak also. If required to go a mile, go two.' That would indicate we might be expected by Jesus in such cases to make the wedding cake, provide the groom's cake and not make an issue of it. Perhaps this is a time to be 'shrewd as snakes and innocent as doves' rather than demanding our rights."

Then the discussion shifted a bit. "But the government has no right to define and regulate marriage. Marriage is God ordained and the government should stay entirely out of it."

I asked, "So it should not be illegal to marry more than one person at a time or for children under the age of 13 to be given in marriage? Isn't that government regulation and definition of marriage?"

"But those are common sense laws. Everyone agrees to them."

"Obviously the people who would violate them do not agree. Are our laws simply a pooled agreement of the general population? Is not one purpose of the law to protect the weak, the innocent, or the disadvantaged? When do we choose compliance with the law or embrace rebellion to it? These were the questions of the early revolutionists, the slave owners, the civil rights protestors, and now being asked by gay activists. I do not agree with homosexuality being 'God sanctioned', I believe it is opposed to God and sinful. But the question was about law and our behavior in such times. I, because I see it as a challenge to my faith, see myself subject to the regulation of Jesus regarding how I react to those who oppose me and challenge my views. I believe I am called to "take on the burden and walk the extra mile" in these kinds of cases. Rather than speak of our rights, I believe we should be showing the spirit that Jesus recommended in these situations.'

Well, the bell rang. We didn't all agree. I was told by two of the participants, "That wasn't what we thought you would say."

I hope I used Scripture appropriately.

Carl*

"What do you think about the new 'Religious Freedom Law' in Indiana?" I wasn't being set up, but a group of staff will share a time of discussion, usually about history, over the lunch hour when I am at school. The four of us all profess faith in God, but our expression is shaded by the denominational history and religious traditions that we have embraced throughout our lives. As a result, I always try to think carefully before responding to such questions, and try to express my thoughts with ties to specific Scripture references and principles.

One of the participants quickly stated, "It is a good thing. I don't think the government should mandate what kind of services and to whom I offer them. If it is my business then I get to provide them to whomever I choose, free from government interference."

"Yet that is the same argument that was made regarding offering services to African and Native Americans during the past 100 years that most of us would say was inappropriate and not Christ-like," was my reply.

Another participant said, "But the effort among this group (in the context, homosexual couples who were demanding a Christian running a bakery make a wedding cake), is to force the owner to do something he believes is wrong. It is a form of religious persecution".

My answer was, "When early followers of Jesus were suffering under governmental laws because of their religious views, Jesus said, 'If required to give your
