

the important things that I believe that disciples do, ask what they learned about God in all aspects of life.

The Bible is God's description of his love and character in interaction with mankind across history. As I read the gospel story, I see God in the person of Jesus, doing just that. It is an incredible learning experience, and one that draws me to him. In a setting where the normal questions are about "What violates the Sabbath?" Or, "Doesn't God keep us from doing these things?" Jesus takes a man with a withered hand, or one who is impacted by a crippling paralysis, or hungry disciples with a handful of grain and asks a very different question. What does God desire in these situations? Is God on the side of good or evil? Is God's intent for others to struggle or receive relief?

He isn't vindictive, abusive or harsh as he deals with those trapped in frailty, but rather demonstrates mercy, kindness, respect and a desire to help. What a different way to see it.

In the same way, those trapped in the penalties of their sins are not simply "sinners", different from us. We share the ugliness of sinful behavior, we've found a release from the penalty in Jesus. We don't highlight the difference through critical name calling, hatefully labeling and using disrespectful treatment, at least not if we are like Jesus. We look for God's purpose, see the common ground and work toward a movement that allows release from the entrapment. We rejoice in a merciful God, not superior to those who haven't found him, but as guides and friends who point to grace and mercy. Respect, kindness, compassion... yes, an oasis in a landscape littered with ugliness. Where do you think we as a church should position ourselves?

Grace and Peace,

March 6, 2016

I was involved in some training this past week to maintain my license as a LCMFT. As you probably know, the elders have been gracious in allowing me to have the time away for these training sessions each year. I appreciate each time I am away.

This time the expert who spoke focused on "Collaborative Couple Therapy", a field he developed. As I saw his work with different couples in crisis, as well as his interaction with the hundreds of therapists from different specialties in the room, I was impressed by the respect and kindness that he used in his approach.

As you have likely experienced, when we move into conflict emotions become elevated, tempers flare and accusations fly. In the heat of the "battle" respect often takes a backseat as assumptions are made and harshness rises to the surface. Kindness in those situations becomes a distant memory as words are used to attack others and protect ourselves.

His respectful tones, kind questions, and calm demeanor were an oasis of civility in a landscape littered with ugliness.

As I drove home from Overland Park I reflected on what I had learned, as well as what it taught me about God. That is one of
