From The Elders at the St John Church of Christ

Gratitude, like love, is self-perpetuating. It grows as we express it. We might express our thanks in prayer, in a journal entry, or in a letter – possibly the best way is face to face, drawing us closer together. It is good to share our blessings. Small random acts of kindness can not only make the other person's day brighter, but will also put brightness into ours. This is how gratitude and sharing changes the world – it starts by changing our hearts.

When we are less than happy, we can have a pity party, and we can make those around us feel less than happy, or we can count our blessings and reach out and do something special for someone else. This will change our hearts, and that helps us so we can be encouragers to others. It is uplifting to talk to people that are encouragers. If we love each other as a family, as we should, we should always be looking to encourage each other. If our hearts are right, this should happen naturally but if it doesn't, we can work on it together.

Please everyone! This is important! If YOU do not feel this way with at least the elders and deacons, please let us know so we can work on it. We want you ALL to know that we LOVE YOU and we want this type of relationship with each of you. Communicate with us about how we can be more involved with you personally. Sharing with us openly on how we can be more helpful to each of you will help us all work together to glorify God.

Have a great week. May God bless you all in your lives each and every day.
