

name calling begins. The stories just get worse and worse. Our fears get rattled and thinking appears to be tossed out the window.

I wonder where “rebel flags” fit in the list of what is important? For that matter, where do you imagine how a particular government, during a particular period of time, defines marriage fits on God’s agenda?

It becomes particularly important for us to remember when we reflect that our primary task is to love God and each other. The foundation of Christianity resides in these two principles.

If we can be distracted to malign or abuse an individual/group, or focus on less important matters, Satan wins and there is no “homework assignment”.

Be sure you hear me... I am not calling what God has said is sinful, righteous. Woe to the one who begins to do that. Staying focused on our task is the issue, having our priorities in order.

Jesus dealt with a woman caught in the act of adultery with compassion and clarity. He dealt with the social outcasts, the publicans, the whores, the impoverished and the beggars with kindness, compassion, and mercy. We can do no less if we hope to be like him.

You see, Jesus seems to see sinners being victimized by their sin. He approaches them as slaves to sin, captives needing to be freed. He doesn’t sit on the sidelines pontificating, he sits at their tables sharing a meal. He touches the leper, laughs with the prostitute and shares time with the publican. Satan is the enemy, not those sold into slavery to him.

Grace and Peace,

Carl

July 12, 2015

When I was a boy, we knew which teachers we could distract at the end of the hour by getting them to tell stories, so that they would not have time to give a homework assignment. We did it as often as possible; distraction was the tool to avoid homework.

Tim Tebow made this statement and I was impressed by how clear and centered it is: "Christians spend so much time fighting about numbers 58 to 62 on the list of what's important we never get to work on number one and two; loving God and loving people. When we put the first things first, we will find unity in Christ."

Suddenly I realize what Satan has been doing so effectively among us. Politics, policy, threats to the status quo.... All things that have been high on the Twitter feeds, blog posts, and coffee shop conversations in the past few weeks. Not only do the conversations revolve around the “issues” but soon they digress to comments about the motivations and intentions of the ones with whom they disagree. After the motivation is adequately maligned, the
