

the closet as the days become cooler. We will be making the shift from air conditioning to heating before too long. Learning to adapt is what allows us to survive.

Early Christians did the same thing. As persecution began to intensify in Jerusalem, they adapted... moving into the surrounding region, taking their message with them. It was the apostles who remained in Jerusalem (Acts 8).

There are those who lament the “influence” school has on our schedules, the competition for time with sporting events, practices, and various demands on time, but they are far less intrusive than persecution. Schools and the Recreation Commission, or gymnastics, or wrestling or music programs are not the enemy. They demand change in the way we do things, and change isn’t something we do well.

Understand that Christians have always adapted within their society to compensate for the external pressures around them. Our message doesn’t change, but we adapt to be able to communicate the message of Jesus to those who have not heard.

So, if you are inconvenienced because those with school aged children are not available for certain events, or if your availability does not correspond to the schedule of others in school districts around you, don’t complain because you must change.

Change always appears to be a crisis. We tend to panic a bit when we move out of our familiar rhythms in life. Yes, it isn’t the most comfortable thing in the world. In our world we may be accustomed to going to the wall and changing the thermostat to alter the environment around us, saving us from putting on a sweater. Schools, culture, the dictates of the rest of the world... you won’t find a thermostat there, so learn to adapt.

Grace and Peace,

A Family of God

August 28, 2016

School has begun again. That is, perhaps, as important as the weather turning to fall. In earlier cultures, the changing seasons shifted the workload so families adjusted their schedule to address the harvesting of fall crops, canning the last of a garden, and the recognition of waning daylight. Children became available for school as the need for them on the farm declined.

Today, we begin to look at our calendars differently. We plan things around school holidays, sporting events, or even the school routine. Small children are put to bed at an earlier time so they can be rested to rise in time for school the next day. Parent work schedules are adjusted as teacher workdays or sick children require different arrangements for childcare.

In my own life, Mondays, with high school lunch at the church building and Thursday mornings when I am at the school seeing kids, things such as these become a deciding factor in how I schedule my life. So, we’ve moved into this “different season” fully now.

Adapting to our surroundings has always been a part of our lives. We shift from short sleeve to long sleeve shirts. We pull jackets and sweaters out of
